LOSS OF VOTING RIGHTS

A) Convicted Out of State / Federal Court – A person shall forfeit their right to remain a voter or to become a voter if they have been convicted of a felony and committed to confinement in a federal correctional institution or facility, or committed to the custody of the chief correctional official of any other state or a county of any other state for confinement in a correctional institution or facility or a community residence in such state or county.

B) Convicted in the State of Connecticut – A person shall forfeit their right to remain a voter or to become a voter if they have been convicted of a felony and committed to the custody of the Commissioner of Correction in the State of Connecticut for confinement in a correctional institution or facility or a community residence.

Note: If you have lost your voting rights in the past because of a felony conviction only, you can follow the instructions below to have your voting rights restored.

RESTORATION OF VOTING RIGHTS

A) Convicted Out of State / Federal Court – A person who has been convicted of a felony and committed to confinement in a federal or out of state correctional institution or facility or community residence shall be eligible to have such person's voting privileges restored upon the payment of all fines in conjunction with the conviction and upon release from confinement, and, if applicable, parole.

Here's How:

- 1) Contact the Registrars of Voters in the town where you live to obtain a voter registration card. You can also obtain voter registration cards from any public library, the DMV, DSS or any other voter registration agency.
- 2) Fill out the voter registration card and submit the card to the registrars of voters in the town in which you live either a) in person or b) by mail.

B) Convicted in the State of Connecticut – A person who has been convicted of a felony and committed to confinement in a State of Connecticut correctional institution or facility or community residence shall be eligible to have such person's voting privileges restored upon the release from confinement, and, if applicable, parole.

Here's How:

- 1) Contact the Registrars of Voters in the town where you live to obtain a voter registration card. You can also obtain voter registration cards from any public library, the DMV, DSS or any other voter registration agency.
- 2) Fill out the voter registration card and submit the card to the registrars of voters in the town in which you live either a) in person or b) by mail.

IMPORTANT EXCEPTION

If convicted of a felony and committed for confinement for a violation of Title 9 of Connecticut Election statutes, your electoral privileges cannot be restored until you have fulfilled all of the requirements set forth above and have been discharged from probation.

Conn. Gen. Stats. Secs. 9-45, 9-46 and 9-46a, as amended by Public Act 06-137

Sec. 9-45. Removal of convicted felons from registry list. (a) The Commissioner of Correction shall, on or before the fifteenth day of each month, transmit to the Secretary of the State a list of all persons who, during the preceding calendar month, have been convicted in the Superior Court of a felony and committed to the custody of the Commissioner of Correction for confinement in a correctional institution or facility or a community residence. Such lists shall include the names, birth dates and addresses of such persons, with the dates of their conviction and the crimes of which such persons have been convicted. The Secretary of the State shall transmit such lists to the registrars of the towns in which such convicted persons resided at the time of their conviction and to the registrars of any towns where the secretary believes such persons may be electors. The registrars of such towns shall compare the same with the list of electors upon their registry lists and, after written notice mailed by certified mail to each of the persons named at the last-known place of address of such person, shall erase such names from the registry lists in their respective towns or voting districts.

(b) Any person who procures such person or another to be registered after having been disfranchised by reason of conviction of crime and committed to the custody of the Commissioner of Correction for confinement in a correctional institution or facility or a community residence, and any person who votes at any election after having forfeited such privileges by reason of conviction of crime and confinement, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned not more than one year.

Sec. 9-46. Forfeiture of electoral rights. (a) A person shall forfeit such person's right to become an elector and such person's privileges as an elector upon conviction of a felony and committal to the custody of the Commissioner of Correction for confinement in a correctional institution or facility or a community residence, committal to confinement in a federal correctional institution or facility, or committal to the custody of the chief correctional official of any other state or a county of any other state for confinement in a correctional institution or facility or a community residence in such state or county.

(b) No person who has forfeited and not regained such person's privileges as an elector, as provided in section 9-46a, may be a candidate for or hold public office.

Sec. 9-46a. Restoration of electoral privileges. (a) A person who has been convicted of a felony and committed to confinement in a federal or other state correctional institution or facility or community residence shall have such person's electoral privileges restored upon the payment of all fines in conjunction with the conviction and such person has been discharged from confinement, and, if applicable, parole.

(b) Upon the release from confinement in a correctional institution or facility or a community residence of a person who has been convicted of a felony and committed to the custody of the Commissioner of Correction and, if applicable, the discharge of such person from parole, (1) the person shall have the right to become an elector, (2) the Commissioner of Correction shall give the person a document certifying that the person has been released from such confinement and, if applicable, has been discharged from parole, (3) if the person was an elector at the time of such felony conviction and, after such release and any such discharge, is residing in the same municipality in which the person resided at the time of such felony conviction, the person's electoral privileges shall be restored, and (4) if the person was an elector at the time of such felony conviction and, after such release and any such discharge, is residing in a different municipality or if the person was not an elector at the time of such felony conviction, the person's electoral privileges shall be restored or granted upon submitting to an admitting official satisfactory proof of the person's qualifications to be admitted as an elector. The provisions of subdivisions (1) to (4), inclusive, of this subsection shall not apply to any person convicted of a felony for a violation of any provision of title 9 until such person has been discharged from any parole or probation for such felony.

(c) The registrars of voters of the municipality in which a person is admitted as an elector pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of this section, within thirty days after the date on which such person is admitted, shall notify the registrars of voters of the municipality wherein such person resided at the time of such person's conviction that such person's electoral rights have been so restored to him.

Supporting Information Section 3

This section describes the data preparation procedures for the analyses presented in Tables 1-3.

Identification of Experiment Population

Tables 1-3 report the results of a field experiment that used mailings to contact unregistered former felons and encourage them to register and vote. To identify a population of unregistered former felons to contact, we partnered with the Connecticut Secretary of State's office and obtained lists of every person convicted of a felony in the state, as well as those released, between July 2009 and the end of June 2012. These files included each individual's name, date of birth, address,¹ date of conviction, most serious crime for which they were convicted, release date and sentence length (in the release file only), and a unique identifier (an inmate number).² Using this inmate number, we merged the conviction and release files to compile a master list that consisted of all individuals convicted of a felony over this period. Entries were matched to the release file using the unique inmate identifier to determine those convicted of felonies at multiple points in time. Only the most recent record was kept to ensure that no person released during our period but subsequently jailed during the length of our experiment made it into our sample. As the ability to register (and vote) is contingent upon being out of prison, we then removed anyone still in prison as of June 30, 2012.

We further reduced this list based on the number of observations for each crime, their nature, and time served. First, all crimes with less than ten instances were eliminated. Second, we excluded from our sample all crimes involving sexual assault or children as victims, or those that resulted in the death of another person. From the remaining list and in consultation with a practicing Connecticut attorney, we identified crimes that could potentially involve serious harm to an individual. As we lacked any information other than the crime for which a person was convicted (e.g., burglary in the third degree), we could not definitively know whether each flagged instance actually resulted in such injury. Based on the lawyer's advice about typical incarceration length and the nature of these crimes, we concluded that a high likelihood existed for any sentence for a person crime over one year to correspond to serious bodily injury. We thus dropped these cases from our sample and removed those crimes that subsequently fell below the ten-case threshold. Further processing, as described below, led to the removal of additional cases from the experimental sample, and thus several types of crimes did in fact have less than ten instances. The final list of the types of crimes included in our experimental sample and their frequencies are reported in Table SI.3.1. The final list of the serious crimes excluded from the experimental sample and their frequencies are reported in Table SI.3.2.

¹ The addresses in the conviction and release files may differ due to an individual's decision to reside in another location after they are released from prison.

² The Secretary of State's office did not produce files for August or October of 2010, so we lack information for these two months.

We also removed another section of the population on whom the treatments could have no influence: those already registered to vote. To do so, we obtained from the Connecticut Secretary of State's office a voter file created on August 22, 2012. The list included not only those currently registered, but also entries for inactive voters or those "off" the rolls for a variety of reasons (including incarceration). Flagged individuals registered to vote at some point in time, but some question existed about their eligibility to vote (inactive), or they no longer possessed the right to do so. Such individuals must re-register if they wish to vote, and can thus potentially be affected by the treatment. In order to capture our targeted population of unregistered released felons, we eliminated inactive registrant entries in the voter file, then sought to merge the master felon list with the voter file. Unfortunately, no unique identifier existed to facilitate this procedure. The only reliably consistent variables across both the conviction and voter files were the released felon's date of birth and last name. We might also suspect that the addresses were the same, but it is probable that a number of individuals moved but failed to re-register before their convictions. In addition, informal versions or inaccurate recordings of first names hindered an exact match. In the former situation, a name may have been listed as "Mike" in the release file but took the more proper "Michael" form on the voter roll. With respect to the latter, variations of the same name (e.g., "Steven" vs. "Stephen") or simple misspellings (e.g., "Raymond" vs. "Reymond") appeared.

To address this problem, we first merged the CT voter file with the list of former felons by creating every potential pairwise combination based on the two common and reliably consistent variables (date of birth and last name). We then assigned various levels of quality and confidence to the matches of former felons to the voting file via a multi-stage process. Based on the information common to both data sets, we determined six possible scenarios in which we might consider an individual in the voter file to be the same person as an individual in the former felon file. In addition to date of birth and last name, these included (in decreasing levels of quality) (1) same first name and town of address; (2) same first name but different town; (3) first name phonetically the same but spelled differently and same town; (4) first name phonetically the same but spelled differently and different town; (5) same first initial and town but first name phonetically and grammatically different; (6) same first initial, different town, and first name phonetically and grammatically different.³ Potential matches were machine coded for reliability and matches of lower quality were hand coded to eliminate suspect matches.

We examined each of the six match classifications separately, beginning with that in which we had the most confidence: identical first name, last name, town, and birth date. Since we considered these the highest quality matches possible, we dropped all pairs from the other five matching scenarios that contained one of these future felons' id numbers. We then turned to the remaining matches that share the same date of birth, first name, and last name, but had different towns. We treated these cases as valid matches and dropped the remaining unchecked entries with an inmate id number from these observations.

For the rest of the scenarios, determining proper matches required varying degrees of subjectivity. As a next step, we examined those cases with the same last name, date of birth, town, and whose first names were phonetically the same but spelled differently. We relied on the Stata (version 12.1) command "soundex" to identify these cases. For example, the program flagged as the same combinations such as "Terry" and "Terri," "Lorenzo" and "Larenzo," and "Stephen" and "Steven." Each case that met this criterion was manually checked to ensure both a visual and audial match. After dropping unchecked cases with the same felon id number, we repeated this process for matches that did not share the same town.

³ All six categories relied on matching the last name. It is conceivable, however, that an individual would have changed his or her last name after registration but before incarceration, perhaps due to marriage or for religious reasons. Unfortunately, the lack of other identifying indicators shared by the two datasets made the identification of any such cases impossible.

The last two matching scenarios included pairs with the same date of birth, last name, and first initial, but entire first names that were neither spelled the same nor phonetically identical. For these cases that shared towns in common, we manually compared their first names, kept the correct matches, and removed unverified observations with matching felon identifiers. We conducted the same procedure for the pairs that had different towns. Finally, we combined those cases that met one of the six matching criteria into a single file and verified that there were no duplicate entries. Using this file, we then excluded from the analysis those identified as registering after their release date, as well as those whose registration dates preceded their release dates (implying that not all felons were successfully purged from the voter rolls upon conviction).⁴

Since our treatment consisted of a mailed letter, we further excluded from this non-registered former felon list any individual whose mailing address we could not confirm. The independent agency hired to print and send the mailings ran all of our records through the National Change of Address (NCOA) filter and address standardization software. This procedure flagged a number of entries. Some were incomplete, lacking a house/apartment number or street name. Others indicated that the former felon was homeless or listed a shelter as his or her residence. For these situations, there was nothing we could do to generate a correct address with any confidence, so the cases were dropped. The remaining instances involved addresses that as listed did not exist, often due to spelling or punctuation errors that the software could not decipher. We manually checked each address, making subjective decisions on whether we could identify the correct address. For some there was little debate. “54 Main Stree”, we assumed, could probably be agreed by most people to be “54 Main Street”. A similar case was “96 Woodridge Ave” versus “96 Woodbridge Ave”, when no “Woodridge Ave” (or Street or Place) existed in the listed city. A number of cases exhibited similar discrepancies. Other decisions, however, required greater discretion on our part. Was “56 Main Street” (in the release file) the same as “56 Main Court” if the latter was the only road with “Main” in its name in the city? We answered in the affirmative, but not if a “56 Main Terrace” was also found in the same city. We erred on the side of caution in light of the sensitive nature of the reason for assignment into the treatment group (being a former felon), and only included as valid manual matches those in which we possessed substantial confidence.

Matching Sample to CT Voter Files Post-Election (2012) and Pre-Election (2008)

To determine which former felons in our treatment and control groups registered and/or voted, we relied on a post-election voter file obtained from the CT Secretary of State from January of 2013. We conducted the same multi-stage matching process as previously described, and excluded all inactive entries for those who registered prior to August 1 to avoid false positives (i.e., these individuals are still on the rolls but flagged due to their felon status, meaning they have not re-registered since their incarceration ended). The subsequent registration and voting information was merged with the master file of all individuals included in the experiment. We then merged this file (using the same multi-stage matching process) with an early 2009 CT voter file created by a third party to obtain information on registration prior to and voting in the 2008 presidential election.
